Long for Factor Prop account

When I started at the board of trade in 1975 there were hardly any chartists. Today everybody seems to be keeping charts. There was one other huge difference between then and now. The only real day traders back then were people at the exchange. Retail traders who use charts were very few.

Ultimately, the trader who stands the test of time is the one who avoids the big mistakes. Avoiding big mistakes is more important than finding big trades.

Hey Factor Members
Just turned on home screen
Just so you know what I saw in EuroStoxx 50

NY Cotton, NY Coffee, NY Cocoa, NY Copper
These comprise what I refer to as the
THE NEW YORK "C" MARKETS FROM HELL
Expect terrible fills
This is why I try to trade softs in London and avoid NY "C" markets

Any trade I do will likely be based on the weekly chart. But when a market reaches a target or in the early stages of a trade I am very sensitive to individual bars

Great to see you back Peter, I hope the surgery went well!.
When a future is moving with higher vol than usual, like Silver now, do you find trading smaller time intervals like hourly are sufficiently reliable? I think so but was wondering what your opinion is.

Could become an early Oct top. Strong cycle for BTC to top, but remember, counter cyclic moves are the strongest

I specifically stated "IF IT CLOSED RIGHT HERE"

It has not yet closed. Remember, I am not even long in Gold right now
